ABSTRACT

To help reduce the guess work that underpins many phonics programs, a study comprehensively examined the phonic elements of 17,211 words drawn from the 17,310 word list originally compiled by Thorndike and Lorge and later updated by members of the Stanford Spelling Project. Each word in the list was assigned its corresponding respelling that was given in the "American Heritage Dictionary" and reorganized into one of six groups: five by the relative frequency of occurrence as assigned by Thorndike and Lorge and a sixth formed of the words included by the Stanford researchers. A computer program was then written that searched for specific letters or letter combinations within the words; R-controlled vowels, single vowels, final-vowel-consonant-E, adjacent vowels, consonant phonograms, compound consonants, and single consonants. Using these categories as a point of reference, a number of phonics generalizations were framed, each of which has at least a 90% efficiency. (The study includes the word lists as well as statistical data for both the words found in the total word corpus and the most frequently occurring words.) (HOD)

Chapter 1

OVERVIEW

The graphophonic cue system is one of the most misunderstood aspects of beginning reading programs. Much of this misunderstanding could have been resolved if phonic programs had been structured around definitive studies relating to letter-sound correspondence of the English language. However, classroom practices have been largely dictated by consensus of authoritative opinion rather than by research (Gates, 1981). This study was designed to comprehensively examine the phonic elements of a relatively large word corpus with the intention of reducing the guess work that underpins many phonic programs.

RESEARCH DESIGN

The first step in conducting the study was to select a suitable word list. After examining several corpora, 17,211 words were drawn from the 17,310 word list originally compiled by Thorndike and Lorge (1944) and later updated by Hanna and the other members of the Stanford Spelling Project (1966). This word corpus satisfied four basic criteria held by the author: (1) the words were drawn from a wide array of children's literature; (2) the words were categorized according to frequency of occurrence; (3) the corpus was large enough to include a wide spectrum of words yet small enough to exclude many specialized words; and (4) the corpus was computerized. Each word in the list was assigned its corresponding respelling that was given in the AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY (1979). The words were then reorganized into six groups: five by the relative frequency of occurrence as assigned by Thorndike and Lorge and a sixth formed of the words included by the Stanford researchers. Shown in Table 1.1 are these categories and their corresponding parameters. A review of the Thorndike and Lorge study reveals that the grade level of some words in any one category of words are different from the general grade level of the majority of the other words in the group. Nevertheless, the translation by these researchers from a relative frequency into an approximate grade level is useful and is therefore shown in Table 1.1.

A computer program was written that enabled the author to search for specific letters or letter combinations within the 17,211 words. The following were established as parameters for this search:

1. If more than one occurrence of any one letter or letter combination was found in a word, only the first letter or letter combination was considered.

Numerical Word Codes

Code	Categories
1	100 or more occurrences per million running words (grades 1 and 2)
2	50-99 occurrences per million running words (grade 3)
3	30-49 occurrences per million running words (grades 4.0-4.5)
4	10-29 occurrences per million running words (grades 4.5-6.9)
5	1-9 occurrences per million running words (grade 7.0 and up)
6	Words included for the Stanford Spelling Project

2. A letter or letter combination was considered to be predictable if a minimum of 75 percent of the occurrences of a letter or letter combination was represented by a maximum of two sound relationships, or, in the case of the single vowels, three sound relationships.

3. Only the single vowels A, E, I, O, and U were considered in single vowel categories if they were neither immediately preceded nor followed by R.

4. The single vowel Y was considered when it was neither immediately preceded by one of the five major vowels nor immediately followed by R.

5. The vowels found in a final Vowel-Consonant-E pattern (-VCE) or an inflection of this pattern were excluded from single vowel analysis (i.e., the vowels in the word COME and the letter O in COMING were not considered as single vowels).

6. The letter I was excluded from analysis if it replaced a Y in an inflected word.

7. A -VRE or adjacent vowel combination immediately followed by an R was excluded from analysis (i.e., the vowels immediately preceding R in CARE and CLEAR were left unexamined).

8. No analysis was made of more than two vowels in juxtaposition (i.e., the vowel pair OU in the word TEDIOUS was left unexamined as a vowel pair).

9. Using the above criteria, only the vowel pairs that occurred a minimum of a hundred times in the 17,211 word corpus were treated.

10. Adjacent consonants which could pass visually as compound consonants, though not such, were labeled as compound consonant exceptions (i.e., the letters NG in the word ENGAGE were considered as if they were an unpredictable consonant digraph).

ORGANIZATION OF THE STUDY

The computerized data, which are given in the form of the word lists in the subsequent chapters, fall into the broad categories of Vowels and Consonants. The Vowels are divided into (1) R-Controlled Vowels, (2) Single Vowels, (3) Final Vowel-Consonant-E, and (4) Adjacent Vowels; the Consonants are divided onto (1) Consonant Phonograms, (2) Compound Consonants, and (3) Single Consonants. This division, which includes virtually all possible letter patterns, is shown in Table 1.2.

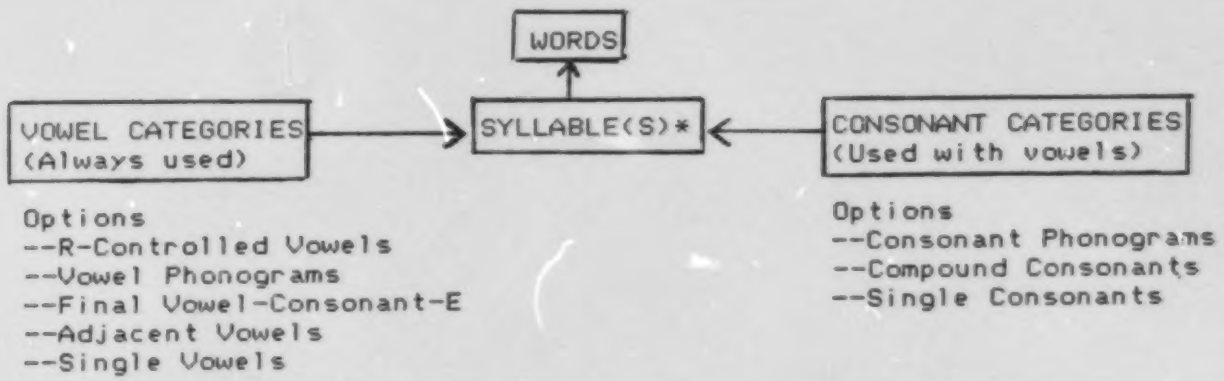
Gates Phonic Model



*See Burmeister (Fall, 1968) for syllabication generalizations.

Using the two general categories of consonants and vowels and their subdivisions for a point of reference, a number of phonic generalizations, listed in Table 1.3, were framed for the word lists found in this report. Excepting the unpredictable generalizations, each of these generalizations has at least a 90 percent efficiency. (Statistical data

Combined Phonic Generalizations

R-Controlled Vowels

The R gives the [immediately] preceding vowel [or vowels] a sound that is neither long nor short (Curry and Geis, 1976).

Final Vowel-Consonant-E

When a word ends in a single -VCE, the E is silent and the vowel is long or has the short I sound, except words ending in -ILE (unpredictable), -INE (unpredictable), -SOME (some, handsome), and -OVE (unpredictable).

Adjacent Vowels

The following adjacent vowel phonograms generally have one of two sounds: -IATE (deviate, opiate), and OUSE (douse, rouse).

The following adjacent vowel phonograms generally have one sound: CIA (except -ciate: special), FOOT (foot), IET (diet), ION (action), OOK (book), OUN (count), and -OUS (famous).

The following pairs generally have one of two sounds: EA (beat, head) and OW (blow, town).

The following pairs generally have one sound: AI (fail), AU (autumn), AY (day), EE (see), boat), -IE (one syllable word, tie) IE (field), OA (boat), OO (moon), and OI (join).

The following units are unpredictable: EAL (except EALTH), IA (except -IATE and CIA), IEN, IO (except ION), OOD, and OU (except OUSE, -OUN, and -OUS).

Single Vowels

The single vowels A and I usually have their own short sound or a schwa sound, except the letter combinations ALL and ALT in one syllable root words (ball and salt), ATION (nation), WA (unpredictable), -A-Consonant-E in two syllable words (table), and IGHT (night).

A single final E is silent, unless it is final Consonant-L-E.

A single vowel E usually has the short E, short I or schwa sound, including E in final Consonant-L-E otherwise except final E.

A final single vowel O usually has a long O sound, except the words DO and TO and their inflections; otherwise, a single vowel O is unpredictable.

A single vowel U in a U-Consonant-Vowel pattern usually has the sound heard in MUSIC, NUMEROUS, or POPULAR; otherwise, it usually has its short sound or a schwa sound.

A single vowel Y that does not end a word is unpredictable.

A final single vowel Y that ends a one syllable word or ends a word preceded by F usually has the sound heard in BY or DEFY; otherwise, a final single vowel Y usually has the sound heard in HAPPY.

Consonant Related Generalization

Two major sounds are heard for CH, NG, Qu, S, SION, TH, Tu, and X; otherwise, one major sound is heard for each consonant category, except WHO and WHOLE and their inflections and the irregular consonant digraph GH.

relevant to each generalization can be found in the following chapters of this report and in the references cited in the bibliography). Moreover, this high predictability for the letter-sound relationships suggests that the English language is highly phonetic when the language is addressed as it is in this report.

Along with the word lists found in the following chapters are statistical data for both the words found in the total 17,211 word corpus and for the most frequently occurring words--those words that are coded one through four. However, phonic programs rarely include words that exceed these high-frequency words. Because of this the word lists found in this report are limited to these high-frequency words unless fewer than sixty of them were found. If this was the case, all of the words found in the 17,211 word corpus containing a particular phonic element were listed. In as much as this is the case for the -STLE phonogram example found in Table 1.4, all of the words ending in -STLE within the 17,211 word corpus are listed. This table also shows that the unpredictable words are grouped at the end of each list.

Finally, the subsequent sections of this report are divided into the following chapters: Single Vowels, Final Vowel-Consonant-E, Adjacent Vowels, and Consonants. The R-controlled vowels were not included as a chapter in this study because their sounds are more likely to vary from dialectical region to region than are the other vowels (AMERICAN HERITAGE DICTIONARY, 1979). Nevertheless, they are listed in the Appendix.

SINGLE VOWELS

Parameters relating specifically to the selection of single vowels, which are found in this chapter, include the following:

Only the single vowels A, E, I, O, and U were considered if they were neither immediately preceded nor followed by one of the five major vowels nor immediately followed by R.

A single vowel Y was considered when it was neither immediately preceded by one of the five major vowels nor immediately followed by R.

The vowels found in a final vowel-consonant-E pattern (-VCE) or an inflection of this pattern were excluded from single vowel analysis (i.e., the vowels in the word COME and the letter O in COMING were not considered as single vowels).

The letter I was excluded from analysis if it replaced a Y in an inflected word.

Of the 22 single vowel units listed in Table 2.0, three are unpredictable while the others have a predictability of at least 82 percent. The following generalizations summarize the data found in the table.

The single vowels A and I usually have their own short sound or a schwa sound, except the letter combinations ALL and ALT in one syllable root words (ball and salt), ATION (nation), WA (unpredictable), -A-CON-E in two syllable words (table), and IGHT (night).

A single final E is silent, unless it is final Consonant-L-E.

A single vowel E usually has the short E, short I or schwa sound, including E in final Consonant-L-E otherwise except final E.

A final single vowel O usually has a long O sound, except the words DO and TO and their inflections; otherwise, a single vowel O is unpredictable.

A single vowel U in a U-Consonant-Vowel pattern usually has the sound heard in MUSIC, NUMEROUS, or POPULAR; otherwise, it usually has its short sound or a schwa sound.

A single vowel Y that does not end a word is unpredictable.

A final single vowel Y that ends a one syllable word or ends a word preceded by F usually has the sound heard in BY or DEFY; otherwise, a final single vowel Y usually has the sound heard in HAPPY.

The word lists for the single vowels, which are arranged according to the organization found in Table 2.0, follow.

Chapter 3

VOWEL-CONSONANT-E WORD ENDINGS

Words ending in a final Vowel-Consonant-E (-VCE) are found in this chapter. The data in Table 3.0, which exclude -VRE units, can be summarized in the following generalization:

> When a word ends in a single -VCE, the E is silent and the vowel is long or has the short I sound, except words ending in -ILE (unpredictable), -INE (unpredictable), -SOME (some, handsome), and -OVE (unpredictable).

The overall efficiency of this generalization is 95 percent (1917/2010 words). Following are the -VCE word lists which are organized according to the information found in Table 3.0.

Chapter 4

ADJACENT VOWELS

Traditionally the vowel pairs have been lumped into the following generalization: "When two vowels go walking, the first one says its name while the second is silent." Greif (1981) showed that this generalization has a predictability of only 14 percent--a percentage that renders the generalization useless. However, a relatively large amount of predictability can be shown for the pairs if instead of lumping them together they are addressed individually, as is done in this chapter. The vowel pairs included in the study were those that occurred a minimum of a hundred times in the 17,211 word list and were not immediately followed by an R nor were of more than two vowels in juxtaposition.

The adjacent vowel data found in Table 4.0 can be reorganized into five general categories: (1) phonograms with two major sounds, (2) phonograms with one major sound, (3) vowel pairs with two major sounds, (4) vowel pairs with one major sound, and (5) unpredictable units. Using this reorganization, the facts in Table 4.0 can be generalized as follows:

The following adjacent vowel phonograms generally have one of two sounds: -IATE (deviate, opiate), and OUSE (douse, rouse).

The following adjacent vowel phonograms generally have one sound: CIA (except -ciate: special), FOOT (foot), IET (diet), ION (action), OOK (book), OUN (count), and -OUS (famous).

The following pairs generally have one of two sounds: EA (beat, head) and OW (blow, town).

The following pairs generally have one sound: AI (fail), AU (autumn), AY (day), EE (see), boat), -IE (one syllable word, tie) IE (field), OA (boat), OO (moon), and OI (join).

The following units are unpredictable: EAL (except EALTH), IA (except -IATE and CIA), IEN, IO (except ION), OOD, and OU (except OUSE, -OUN, and -OUS).

Aside from the unpredictable units, each of the units in the above generalizations meet or exceed an overall predictability of 87 percent. The adjacent vowel word lists follow arranged according to the data found in Table 4.0.

Chapter 5

CONSONANTS

Single consonants, compound consonants, and consonant phonograms are found in this chapter. Adjacent consonants which, though not such, could pass visually as compound consonants were labeled as compound consonant exceptions. For example, although they fail to form a digraph, the letters NG in the word ENGAGE were included as an unpredictable compound consonant in the data analysis for the NG digraph. Also, as a matter of explanation, the terms "soft" C and "hard" G indicates that the consonants are followed by E, I, or Y; when the terms "hard" C and "hard" G are used it indicates that the consonants are not followed by one of these three vowels. The consonant data found in Table 5.0 is summarized in the following generalization which has an overall predictability of 99 percent (60100/60731 words):

> Two major sounds are heard for CH, NG, Qu, S, SION, TH, Tu, and X; otherwise, one major sound is heard for each consonant category, except WHO and WHOLE and their inflections and the irregular consonant digraph GH.

The consonant word lists follow in the order in which they are found in Table 5.0.

Appendix

R-CONTROLLED VOWELS

As was indicated in Chapter 1 of this report, an R usually modifies the sound of an immediately preceding single vowel or vowel pair (Curry and Geis, 1976). However, to attempt to generalize as to what the R-controlled vowel sounds might be for American English at large is futile since they vary more between dialects than do any of the other vowels. Nevertheless, following, arranged in the order of AR, ER, IR, OR, UR and Adjacent Vowels-R, are the most frequently occurring R-controlled vowel word lists which were included so that curriculum could be developed for specific dialects as needed.
